

I am against the proposed copy protection technology requirement for digital TVs. This technology will unnecessarily drive up the cost of TVs and will not be enough of a deterrent to justify it. CDs, DVDs, etc. can still be copied and distributed. The copying of CDs, DVDs, etc. will completely circumvent the technology proposed in this filing rendering it useless. Don't be fooled into believing that the addition of this anti-pirating technology will deter anything. I strongly suggest that this filing be dropped.

Regards,
Paul Centanni